Perfectly Unconventional

reclaims the lost lives of three nationally-known women

All three were devout Catholics, yet their gender-defying careers and lifestyles set them apart, during an era of narrowly proscribed expectations for women.

These three, two artists and one writer, spent parts of their lives at Fisher's Hill, Virginia, and two added Middletown and Winchester as their homes — from the late 1800s through the early 1900s.

The Fisher's Hill Ladies Project was created to research the rich details of their stories, culminating in this 400-page softbound volume.

"...generously illustrated and an engaging read."

Proceeds from the book go toward the purchase of grave markers for each of the three women
